OBJECTIVES

At the end of this Read-A-Book lesson, you should be able to:

1. Recognize that language is fundamentally embedded in children's everyday relationships and experiences.
2. Recognize that reading is a complex and multi-faceted process that includes listening and speaking, phonological awareness, alphabet knowledge, print awareness, comprehension, and writing.
3. Identify three core elements of skilled reading.
4. Describe activities that support children's language and literacy development.
5. Recognize the role of adults in facilitating children's language and literacy development.

General Directions:

- Please print the test questions.
- You may write directly on the printed test question sheets.
- Additional pages may be added for “Apply Your Knowledge” answers.

True/False Questions (20 points)

Write “True” or “False” in the blank after the statement.

		True or False
1.	Reading is a complex and multifaceted process, and children need an approach to learning that integrates many elements.
2.	Infants do not benefit from being read to.
3.	Children have achieved phonological awareness when they are able think about how words sound.
4.	Children talking to other children are the best source of exposure to new words and ideas.
5.	Integral to speech discrimination and phonological awareness is the basic ability to listen carefully.
6.	Shared reading, letter naming, writing, and dramatic play are activities that support children’s language and literacy.
7.	Understanding the English alphabetic system is not critical to skilled reading.
8.	Children will not gain long-term benefits in preschool settings where adults engage them in personally meaningful conversations.
9.	Excursions and field trips are not important to language and literacy development.
10.	Evidence suggests that limited or non-English speaking language learners are more likely to become better readers of English if they receive initial instruction in their native language.
